Interrogating and contrasting English teachers' ideologies, practices and realities

English Language teachers' practices are influenced by our understandings, interests, beliefs, conceptions, contexts, and the people we share with. In the last decades, ELT in Colombia has come into interesting transformations. Some of these transformations have embraced changing perspectives about language, pedagogy, and research as a result of political positionalities and decisions that intersect and interconnect our realities as English teachers.

This year, we turn our lenses to interrogate and contrast ideologies, practices and realities that defy the ELT views in Colombia and worldwide. Consequently, the 57th ASOCOPI annual and third international conference continues strengthening our communities through open spaces for dialogue, resistance, and / or contestation. These spaces allow the exploration of knowledges otherwise about the language, the contexts and, the teaching and learning practices.

Being aware of these critical endeavors, ASOCOPI acknowledges the valuable experiences of English teachers from all educational backgrounds at the local, national and international levels that clearly illustrate changes and transformations. In the same way, ASOCOPI invites teachers to visibilize their work as presenters, and give an account of more local senses of second language pedagogy in the rural, urban, public, private, formal and non-formal scenarios.
